OVERVIEW

INVENTORY of HERITAGE RESOURCES

1.0 INTRODUCTION

This section provides an overview of the Inventory. It outlines the purpose, Official Plan statements and all previous inventories; introduces the database and registers; and provides historical and architectural summaries and guidelines for prioritization.

There are approximately 2,900 buildings inventoried in the City of London for architectural, historical and contextual reasons. This figure represents approximately 3% of the entire building stock, based on an estimated 100,000 buildings in the City. Some important locations are identified in Heritage Places - a guideline document referenced in the Official Plan.

The Inventory covers the entire City following annexation in January 1993 but the listed properties are concentrated in several areas, particularly the core area which includes the original town site.

All inventoried properties are on a computerized listing using London's website. To access a map of the heritage properties as well as the database: 1) access the City's website at www.london.ca; 2) click on E-Services & Maps at the top of the page; 3) click on Inventory of Heritage Resources under the section entitled Interactive Maps.

1.1 RATIONALE

The rationale for listing in this inventory is as follows:

1. Listing indicates that a property satisfies certain approved criteria based on its architecture, history and/or context.
2. Listing a heritage resource promotes community and Municipal Council awareness of the resource and provides information for a variety of educational, research and planning purposes.

3. Listing formally declares that the community attaches special heritage significance to the resource concerned. As such, listing can be used to trigger a wide range of conservation activities, including the application of appropriate controls and assistance measures.
4. Listing identifies important heritage properties for special treatment under the Planning Act, the Ontario Building Code and the Ontario Heritage Act.

1.2 THE INTENT - (Goals and Objectives)

This Inventory complements the Archaeological Master Plan and the Inventory of Cultural Landscapes. The Inventory provides data on properties which define the identity and distinctiveness of London, Ontario. It was developed as a data base which can be used to identify, protect and preserve individual buildings, bridges, groups of buildings and neighbourhoods and thus maintain the distinctive character of London. The inventoried properties include residential, commercial, industrial, institutional and religious buildings, farmhouses, barns and farmsteads. The listed properties meet approved criteria involving the history, architecture and context of each site.

In responding to Vision '96, the public identified neighbourhoods as an important aspect of London's heritage. One of the goals of the Inventory is to identify and conserve traditional neighbourhoods. These areas were developed before the dominance of the automobile and are typically pedestrian-oriented, human-scaled, aesthetically-rich and heterogeneous in terms of the age, size and style of the residential buildings. This legacy of well-functioning traditional neighbourhoods is perhaps London's most important urban resource. Consequently, approximately 2,900 buildings have been listed in neighbourhoods such as Old South, Woodfield, Talbot, Blackfriars, Hellmuth/St.James and East London which developed before World War I and in areas such as Old North, Grosvenor/St.George and Baseline/Commissioners which grew up between the two World Wars.

The London Advisory Committee on Heritage (LACH) continues to develop broad community support for heritage resources through designation of buildings and public education. The LACH works closely with community associations to assist them in recognizing heritage features in their area. By doing this, the LACH reinforces the identity of the City's constituent communities.

Respondents to Vision '96 indicated that streetscapes characterize the City's identity. The Inventory and Heritage Places recognize this by identifying streetscapes and areas. Through the recognition of Heritage Conservation Districts and group designations, the Inventory reinforces our understanding and respect for our heritage.

The decline of the downtown was among the significant issues of the 20th century. The Inventory lists valuable examples of architecture which establish the visual environment of downtown. Consequently, the Inventory forms the basis of several recommendations identified in A Summary of Potential Strategies for Revitalizing Downtown London (Planning and Development Department, 1994). For example, the Downtown Façade, Rehabilitation and Redevelopment Loan Programs emphasize the need for the designation and renovation of priority one buildings. Similar policies are now in place for the Old East Dundas Street Corridor. Policies to curtail the growth of temporary parking lots are premised on retaining existing buildings. Comprehensive heritage strategies for the downtown will be based on the Inventory.

London's rural heritage provides a contrast to its urban heritage. The LACH also works with owners to retain rural architecture within working agricultural landscapes and cultural landscapes. Rural buildings and their environs are conserved within the context of urbanization. Communities in the annexed region also form the basis of the identity for new subdivisions and neighbourhoods. Identifying these characteristics as part of the development process is an important use of the Inventory.

1.3 DEFINITIONS/CONCEPTS

There are several important concepts to understand when discussing a list of heritage resources:

Inventory: The term "inventory" refers to a list of information that has been catalogued, analyzed and organized for a specified resource.

Heritage: In this document the term "heritage" is restricted to real property - buildings and structures.

Database: Part II of this document is comprised of the database. The database is a collection of basic information. Its purpose is to bring together comparable information on a large number of sites in a standard format in a central repository. It provides systematic knowledge of sites so that rational decisions can be reached regarding the property and its heritage value.

Register: Part III of this document is comprised of a list of all properties which have been designated under the Ontario Heritage Act Part IV to the date of this document. It also includes designated properties that have had the designation repealed.

Heritage Conservation District Maps: Part IV is comprised of maps showing the properties in areas designated under Part V of the Ontario Heritage Act. Currently there are two Heritage Conservation Districts in London: East Woodfield and Bishop Hellmuth.

Demolished, De-listed, Lost Designated Heritage Properties: Part V of this document is comprised of a list of heritage designated properties that have been demolished, de-listed, or lost since 1985. The list includes the building address, type (industrial, residential or commercial), the year it was designated, the year it was demolished, de-listed or lost and the cause.

Heritage Cemeteries: Part VI is comprised of a list of heritage cemeteries within the City of London. The current name of each cemetery is listed, as well as its historic name (if different) and the address.

All properties included in the registers have met the requirements of an established set of criteria and have been researched and identified as being important. The Register of Designated Properties is a requirement of the Municipality under the Ontario Heritage Act. Individual buildings designated under Part IV, or groups of buildings designated under Part V of the Ontario Heritage Act are listed as a public record. The register identifies properties that may be subject to density bonuses, financial incentives, development control, etc.

1.4 INVENTORY USERS

The Inventory functions as a planning tool to guide City Council, the LACH, various municipal departments, property owners, developers and heritage groups in their deliberations. It also functions as a guide to heritage resources, indicating potential paper files and photographic sources.

2.0 EXCERPTS FROM THE OFFICIAL PLAN PERTAINING TO THE INVENTORY OF HERITAGE RESOURCES

The Official Plan as excerpted below provides guidance on the intent of the Inventory:

13.2.1. Architectural & Historical Resources Inventory.

Council, through its London Advisory Committee on Heritage (LACH), as provided for in policy 13.4.1., will prepare and maintain a descriptive inventory of heritage resources within the City of London. The inventory will establish priority levels for the protection of each heritage resource based on a set of established criteria relating to the architectural, historical and archaeological importance of heritage resources. The location of properties included in the descriptive inventory of heritage resources will be identified in a guideline document as provided for in policy 19.2.2. of this Plan.

13.4.1. Methods of Implementation

x) Heritage Resources Inventory. Where a property has been identified by Council on the Heritage Resources Inventory as being of architectural and/or historical important to the City, the Zoning By-law may contain provisions which notify property owners and the public that the property is included in the Heritage Resources Inventory.

19.2.2. Guideline Documents

ii) Content. Guideline documents may be adopted by Council to assist with the implementation of any aspect of the Official Plan. In particular, guideline documents shall be adopted to assist with the implementation of any aspect of the Official Plan for the following, but are not limited to the following:

(j) Descriptions of properties on the Heritage Resources Inventory

iii) Status. Guideline documents will be adopted by resolution of Council. Development proposals shall be reviewed to determine their conformity with the provisions of any applicable guideline document and conditions may be imposed upon the approval of the development. Council may allow a reduction, change, or waiver of the provisions of a guideline document if it is the opinion that such action is warranted and that the general intent of the Official Plan will be maintained.

3.0 PREVIOUS INVENTORIES

Several inventories of heritage resources have been undertaken in past years. All inventory lists are represented in the present Inventory of the City of London. The first official inventory was completed in 1991. The subsequent inventory, including a review of the first publication and a list of heritage properties in the annexed region was undertaken in 1993. This is the only officially recognized Inventory of Heritage Resources in London (published 1998).

- Old London Survey (1969) is a photographic survey of "Old London" - the two blocks bounded by Ridout, King, Talbot and Carling Streets. This source provides excellent documentation of the Talbot Block prior to Cambridge Leasehold's purchase and subsequent demolition, and the site of the new Court House - Bell Telephone buildings.
- The Canadian Inventory of Historic Buildings (CIHB) (1974). Initiated by the Federal Government across Canada, CIHB was the first attempt to assess buildings in a systematic fashion in many communities. In London, volunteers gathered the information using the standardized format and sent the information to Ottawa, where it was entered into the computerized inventory. Copies of the photographs taken and computerized output were sent back to London. Approximately 2,000 buildings were inventoried.
- Reflections of London's Past (1975), prepared by the Architectural and Historic Sites Preservation Committee of the City of London (the predecessor of the Local Architectural Conservation Advisory Committee). It presented a prioritized list, in three schedules of London's most important buildings.
- Reports on Selected Buildings in London, Ontario (1977) was prepared as a follow-up to the CIHB inventory. The information was compiled by the Historical Research section of the CIHB.
- The Architectural and Historical Merits of the Central Business District (1981). This document contains two very good maps and photographs which identify important properties downtown.
- London and Middlesex Inventory (1982) was undertaken by the London and Middlesex Historical Society.

- London Downtown Façade Study (1986) was prepared by Nicholas Hill, Architect-Planner & Ted Halwa, Community Planners, London.
- Mainstreet Inventory - Downtown Photographic Building Inventory (1999), prepared by Mainstreet London.

4.0 PRIORITY LEVELS

Priority levels indicate and justify the heritage value of the resources as objectively as possible. Buildings are generally assessed using a numeric grading formula and fall into one of four categories. All buildings listed in the Inventory of Heritage Resources have already been screened and represent the most valuable of the City's building stock. Therefore, all listed buildings have architectural, historical and/or contextual importance.

Priorities can also indicate the degree of change that should be allowed to a structure. The most important structures should be protected and restored as far as practical.

Priority levels of heritage resources in London are based on the following principles:

- All buildings are assessed according to standardized evaluation criteria
- Preservation of heritage resources should reflect every aspect of a community's history. It should be concerned with buildings in less affluent areas as well as with those in more affluent areas. Buildings are evaluated in relation to their importance within their own neighbourhood (or area).
- The categories of heritage resources are referred to as Priority One, Two, Three or Nine. Priority One buildings deserve more consideration, have greater precedence and require more stringent intervention, while Priority Three buildings may not require such a rigorous response.

Priority 1 buildings are London's most important heritage structures and all merit designation under Part IV of the Ontario Heritage Act. They are worthy of protection through whatever incentives may be provided in terms of zoning, bonusing or financial advantage and may be designated without the owner's consent. This group includes not only landmark buildings and buildings in pristine condition, but also lesser well-known structures with major architectural and/or historical significance and important structures that have been obscured by alterations which are reversible.

Priority 2 buildings merit evaluation for designation under Part IV of the Ontario Heritage Act. They have significant architectural and/or historical value and may be worthy of protection by whatever incentives may be provided through zoning considerations, bonusing or financial advantages.

Priority 3 buildings may merit designation as part of a group of buildings designated under Part IV of the Ontario Heritage Act or as part of a Heritage Conservation District designated under Part V of the Act, even though these buildings are not often worthy of designation individually. They may have some important architectural features or historical associations, be part of a significant streetscape or provide an appropriate context for buildings of a higher priority.

Priority 9 is restricted to buildings in Heritage Conservation Districts which individually have little or no heritage value.

4.1 RATIONALE FOR DESIGNATING A PROPERTY

The reasons for designating a property are outlined in the Official Plan. The basis for this rationale is the Inventory of Heritage Resources which is a basic guide to properties of significance in London.

Council may designate heritage resources or examples of heritage resources by by-law pursuant to the Ontario Heritage Act based on the following criteria:

- Architectural Significance*
 - The heritage resource is the work of, or reflects the work of, a major architect, designer or landscape architect;
 - It is an outstanding example of its architectural style or period;
 - It is an example of significant engineering or method of construction;
 - It is a work of outstanding quality as a result of its plan, or its external or internal treatment of materials, space or details;
 - It is representative of a particular period of design or form of land use or

- (f) It is the only example, or one of the few remaining examples, within the municipality of a particular period of style or design;

2. Historical Significance

- (a) The heritage resource is associated with a period or group of persons of local, provincial, national or international importance;
- (b) It is associated with an event or movement of local, provincial, national or international importance;
- (c) It is associated with some significant aspect of the history or development of the community or
- (d) It is an early example of the work of an important architect or builder.

3. Contextual Importance

- (a) The heritage resource forms an essential part of a group of two or more related structures located on the same side of the street, on opposite sides of the street or two or more corners of an intersection;
- (b) It defines or terminates a vista;
- (c) It is an essential element of an area which was laid out according to the planning principles of its period;
- (d) It forms an essential part of a distinctive skyline view; or
- (e) The site is in a critical location where ill-considered construction would adversely affect an important complex of structures or damage an important view or vista.

- 4. The significance of a building of historical and architectural importance may be increased by its geographical context. A building in an area with a high number of structures listed in the Inventory may gain greater significance because of its sympathetic relationship with its surrounding buildings and landscapes.

- 5. Buildings with documented architectural and historic significance should be considered for designation by the LACH as part of a redevelopment proposal. Buildings within or adjacent to a potential Heritage Conservation District may also warrant special protection.

- 6. Properties at prominent street corners are more important strategically than similar properties at mid-block.

None of the last three reasons is sufficient alone to justify designation; they may be, however, supportive of a building's worthiness.

4.2 PROCESS OF DESIGNATION

There are a number of situations that may lead to the designation of a property. The processes required for each situation are described in detail in the Ontario Heritage Act. The Heritage Planner works with the LACH and its sub-committees to process and document each designation as best fits the requirements of the Act. A brief description of the owner-initiated designation process is as follows: 1) The owner of a property applies for heritage designation in writing to the City; 2) The London Advisory Committee On Heritage (LACH) prepares "Reasons for Designation", 3) The property owner agrees to the Reasons for Designation in writing, 4) The LACH recommends heritage designation of the property to Planning Committee and notifies the property owner of the recommendation, 5) Planning Committee recommends designation to Council, 6) Council give notice of intent to designate the heritage property, 7) Notice of Intent to Designate the property is printed in the London Free Press, noting that any person who objects to the designation must, within 30 days after the date of the first publication, serve on the City Clerk a notice of objection in writing, 8) If there are no objections after 30 days, Council designates the property under the Ontario Heritage Act, Part IV, 9) City Clerks register the designation by-law on title, 10) The property owner is notified in writing of the heritage designation and given a copy of the by-law, 11) The property owner receives a heritage property designation plaque, placed on the front exterior façade of the property.

4.3 DE-LISTING

As a process exists for the listing of properties of heritage significance, so a process exists for the de-listing of properties that have been altered to such a degree that the heritage value has been lost. In addition, a property can be removed from the inventory if subsequent study proves there was an error in the assessment of significance.

5.0 HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

London's growth is well described in John Lutman's book, The Historic Heart of London, published in London in 1977. Part of Lutman's book encapsulates the growth of London from its beginning in 1793 through to the time of publication of the book.

"The history of London actually begins in 1793. In March of that year, Lieutenant-Governor John Graves Simcoe selected the site of London as the capital of the newly created province of Upper Canada because of its isolation from possible American invasion. However, the provincial capital became established at Toronto. Nevertheless, Simcoe left as a legacy the idea that eventually a new London would arise at the forks of the Thames.

"What historical elements gave rise to London? Sir John Carling, the noted brewer and Tory MP for London, in an address delivered to the London and Middlesex Historical Society in 1901, gave three turning points to explain the rise of London; the location of the district court and administration in London in 1826; the stationing of the Imperial military garrison there in 1838; and the arrival of the railway in 1853. His analysis was quite correct.

"An act of the Provincial Parliament was passed to make provision for a town survey and the building of a court house. Mahlon Burwell was appointed to make the survey for the site and, as originally surveyed, the village contained 240 acres. Roughly, the southern and western boundaries were formed by the Thames River. To the east, the survey stretched to Wellington Street; and along the north the boundary terminated at North Street (later named Queens Avenue). The latter street formerly jogged west of Richmond and followed Carling Street to the Thames River. This was to avoid the Kent farm to the north which also extended westward over the river.

"Settlement in the early years kept to the Burwell survey as the village limits were surrounded by thick forests and miasmic swamps. By 1840, however, development was occurring outside the old boundaries, to the north of Queens Avenue and to the east of Wellington Street, where new areas were partially surveyed. To take in this new settlement and to facilitate local government, as London was administered as part of the Township of London, the boundaries were extended north to Huron Street and east to Adelaide Street and the settlement, which had reached 2,000 souls, was incorporated as a police village. The first president of the police board was George Jervis Goodhue.

"The population had been considerably increased by the arrival of two or three regiments of British soldiers in 1838, the year after the abortive Upper Canada Rebellion. They occupied what is now Victoria Park and the adjacent blocks to the north and east. The soldiers heightened the social life of the community and military spending brought the prosperity noted in Carling's second factor for London's growth.

"With the village largely constructed of wood, fires in pioneer years were a common occurrence. The worst conflagration in London's early years was the "Great Fire" of April 13th 1845. Three-fourths of the village was destroyed. Assessing the ruins, the village authorities were determined not to witness another catastrophe. London businessmen and home owners were strongly urged at first and later forced by a city by-law to build in brick and stone, rather than in wood. Fire thus began a tradition of brick construction in London. Many residents, fearing the fire-prone village, built new residences along the newly surveyed streets to the north of Queens Avenue in the Talbot area and to the east of Wellington Street in the Midtown and Woodfield areas.

"The rebuilding was stimulated greatly by the arrival of the Great Western Railway, now the Canadian National, in 1853, which was the third turning point in London's history. A boom situation resulted. London was already becoming the hub of a great agricultural hinterland. New businesses and industries were established. Large brick business blocks were built along downtown streets and industries clustered along the railway.

"Between London's incorporation as a town in 1847 and as a city in 1855, when the population came close to 10,000 people, new schools were erected, sidewalks were constructed, roads were graveled, the London and Port Stanley Railroad was opened, a gas company was organized, a brick sewer was built and such public buildings as the Covent Garden Market and Town Hall on Richmond Street were erected. This flurry of construction and railroads was a reflection of the boom period of the 1850's. However, as so frequently occurs, a bust followed the boom and London was badly hit.

"Fortunately, prosperity soon returned, fuelled by the discovery of oil in the Petrolia-Oil Springs area in 1861. Wealthy merchants not only invested in the oil refineries in London east, where the oil was refined, but engaged in the founding of financial empires. Branches of Canada's foremost banks and agents for insurance companies increased their outlets. The 1860's and 1870's witnessed the beginning of new institutions still familiar in London: the Huron and Erie Savings and Loan Corporation (now Canada Trust/Huron and Erie) founded in 1864, the Ontario Loan and Debenture Corporation (now part of Royal Trust) appeared in 1870, and the London Life Insurance Company was incorporated in 1874. Also appearing were the Western Fair, the Insane Asylum, St. Joseph's Hospital, the street railway, the telephone exchange and the Springbank Water Works.

"From this prosperous period, until the end of the century, London grew in size both geographically and demographically. Several of London's adjacent suburbs were annexed - London East in 1885, London South in 1890 and London West in 1898. Pottersburg, Ealing and Chelsea Green followed in 1923. In 1914, on the eve of World War I, London had reached a population of approximately 55,000 people.

"During the interwar period from 1918 to 1939, the city continued to grow steadily, although it was badly affected by the Great Depression. Several large buildings were constructed in this period - the Dominion Public Building on Richmond Street, the first buildings on the present campus of the University of Western Ontario, the Bell telephone Building on Clarence Street and the London Life Insurance Company offices on Dufferin Avenue. Many new homes were built in London South and in the vicinity of Huron Street. A major flood struck London West in April 1937. The water rose fifteen feet in only a few hours. Miraculously, only one resident was killed, though hundreds were left homeless.

"Since the end of World War II, London has experienced a growth unprecedented in its history. With the major annexation of 1961, which added 60,000 people to the city, London has grown to close to a quarter million people in 1976."

Since Lutman's chronicle. London continued to grow in population. With the latest annexation to the City, London grew to a population of 330,000 living in an area of some 422 square kilometers. As the latest-annexed lands become developed, the population continues to increase at a steady rate.

6.0 ARCHITECTURAL STYLES

The following notes were written by Julia Beck for the book Brackets and Bargeboards published by the Architectural Conservancy of Ontario Inc. - London Branch, in 1989.

"The first buildings in London, other than the Court House, were simple log or frame structures, but by the 1830's and 1840's substantial brick and frame buildings were being erected in Georgian, neo-Classical and Regency styles transplanted from England. Detached buildings in each of these styles were symmetrical about a central doorway but roofs, doorways and decorations varied from one style and, to some extent, from one building to the next. Although London has lost most of its early buildings, it is fortunate in having examples of each of these styles preserved on Ridout Street, north of Queens Avenue. The fanlight over the front door and the porch supported by columns indicate a neo-Classical influence in the building now occupied by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, whereas "Eldon House", with a hipped roof and long, narrow windows (partly hidden by a later verandah) was built in the Regency style, and the simple, commercial buildings in the centre of the group (441 - 447 Ridout) are Georgian.

"During the Victorian and Edwardian time ('Edwardian' is sometimes used to refer to the first decade of the twentieth century, although it is usually accepted that Victorian architecture continued into this period), styles from other times and other places continued to be revived and modified. Frequently, two or more styles were combined in one building to produce the eclecticism which is often associated with nineteenth-century architecture. Buildings in many of these styles - Gothic Revival, Italianate, Ontario Cottage, High Victoria, Second Empire, Stick Style, Queen Anne, Tudor Revival and Richardson Romanesque - survive in London. Between World War I and World War II, several styles were revived again; London has, for example, buildings from two different cycles of Tudor Revival (eg: 553 Dufferin Avenue, 1913 and 'Goodholme' at the south -west corner of Waterloo and Epworth, 1932). The revived styles were joined by Art Deco (Dominion Building, north-east corner of Queens and Richmond) and Spanish Californian, used mainly for residential architecture.

"Only four styles - Gothic Revival, Italianate, Ontario Cottage and Queen Anne will be discussed; they are common in London.

"The oldest church in London (St. Paul's Cathedral, 1846) was built in the Gothic Revival style which continues to influence church architecture. For part of the nineteenth century (c. 1850 - 1870) this style was also used for houses. It is characterized by sharp gables and pointed window and/or door openings. Churches incorporate many of the details of medieval Gothic churches, including window tracery, pinnacles and recessed doorways. Houses range from simple Ontario Gothic farmhouses (one-and-one half storey with a small gable over the central doorway), sometimes enlivened by decorative porches, doorways or windows (22 Peter Street and 518 Dufferin Avenue), to buildings with more complex forms and elaborate bargeboards and verandahs (63 Elmwood Avenue and 33 Byron Avenue).

Grand houses designed in the Tudor-Gothic Revival style ("Grosvenor Lodge"/Lawson History Centre, 1017 Western Road and "Thornwood", 329 St. George Street) can be regarded as a variation of Gothic Revival.

"While the Gothic Revival style was being used for some houses, others were designed with low-hipped roof, wide eaves, double brackets and elongated, round or segmental-headed windows. They are described as Italianate after the Italian villas and farmhouses that inspired the style. They often have heavy detailing around windows, doorways and porches (26 Prospect Avenue, 301 Piccadilly Street and 296 Queens Avenue) and quoins emphasizing the corners (526 - 528 Waterloo Street and 504 Colborne Street). A prominent square tower, sometimes regarded as an essential characteristic of this style, is not found in London's Italianate houses.

"The term 'Ontario Cottage' is sometimes used to refer to any single storey or one-and-one half storey nineteenth-century house with two windows and a door on the main façade. In this book, the term is restricted to cottages with a hipped roof, a central doorway and a generally square plan, with or without an extension at the back. 'Ontario Cottage' may seem an anomalous term because cottages of this form are found in many parts of the world. It was introduced, presumably, to recognize the fact, although they are common in much of Ontario, they are very rare in adjoining provinces and states. Their development may have been influenced by Regency architecture which made a cottage style - hipped roof, central doorway, elongated windows, sometimes embellished with a belvedere or verandah - popular, but the general cottage style developed long before the time when the Prince of Wales, later George IV, acted as Regent (1811 - 1820).

"London is particularly rich in cottages, many of them Ontario Cottages. The majority are very simple buildings but some have beautiful doorways, decorated gables and other fine details. Outstanding cottages include 477 Waterloo Street, 805 Richmond Street, and 39 Carfrae Street. Clearly, some people of substance chose to live in a single-storey house. The first 'Flint Cottage' (Springbank Shelter) in Springbank Park is the oldest (c.1837) surviving Ontario Cottage in the City; cottages with the same general form continued to be built well into the twentieth century.

"By the turn of the century, most houses were being built in a style known as Queen Anne or Queen Anne Revival. The origin of the style is associated with the Arts and Crafts movement in England and, in particular, to the work of one architect, Norman Shaw, who emphasized the importance of traditional crafts by reviving some of the characteristics of English architecture in the seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries. His buildings were usually constructed of red brick, sometimes with half-timbering in their gables; they had wide windows with small panes, single-storey and two-storey bays, moulded chimneys, high roofs and gables in many forms.

"The flexibility of the style helped to make it popular. It spread to Canada through the United States where it was considerably modified; there, houses were constructed mainly in wood and became very irregular in form; gables were elaborately decorated and shingles, more reminiscent of Elizabethan than Queen Anne architecture, were used on the walls.

"In London, Queen Anne houses are characterized by a great variety of decorative detail which varies from one house to the next. Large houses (such as 308 and 527 Princess Avenue and 496 Waterloo Street) have irregular plans and silhouettes, a large porch or verandah with columns and other classical details including a pediment emphasizing the approach to the front door, and, frequently, a round or polygonal tower. The flat surface of gables may be treated in one of several ways, such as half-timbering, one or more different types of shingles, or decorative woodwork. Palladian windows are common and windows, particularly those on the second floor, often have small panes surrounding one large pane of glass. Not only was there great variety within the Queen Anne style but it was commonly combined with the other style popular at that time, Richardson Romanesque."

The Queen Anne style remained popular in London until the First World War. The period between the wars was dominated by a less eclectic approach to period styles. In the field of domestic architecture, Georgian Revival, Tudor Revival and Spanish Colonial styles proved popular. One can also see the influence of the Arts and Crafts movement which advocates the use of natural materials and historical vernacular forms, in the Craftsman Style, the English Cottage Style and the Prairie Style, influenced by the work of American Frank Lloyd Wright.

Large institutional and commercial buildings generally adopt period styles that are especially suited to monumental structures. Educational buildings are usually in Collegiate Gothic; the neo-Classical Revival style becomes the norm for government buildings and financial institutions. Towards the end of the period, some very striking structures (such as the Dominion Building) rely on the newer Art Deco style, which attempts to eschew historical allusions in favour of a more formal composition, depending on geometrical shapes and contemporary symbolism.

6.1 ARCHITECTURAL GLOSSARY

Art Moderne - distinguished by streamlined forms such as rounded corners, flat roofs and curved bays giving a generally horizontal appearance to the building.

Art Deco Style - stresses verticality, a multiplicity of planes and angles, and decorative flat surfaces.

Arts and Crafts Style - derived from the ideas of William Morris and Phillip Webb who emphasized the importance of using local materials and local craftsmen. These buildings show a careful attention to decorative details.

Bungalow Style - the main characteristic of this style is a gently pitched front roof extending over the verandah and concealing second storey living space.

Collegiate Gothic - a style commonly used for academic buildings and some other structures in the early twentieth century. Gothic details, rounded doors and windows, and, sometimes, these buildings have steep gables to form a central frontispiece.

Dutch Colonial Houses - the dominant characteristic of this style is a gambrel roof which usually extends over a front porch.

Eclectic Buildings - exhibit characteristics of two or more recognized styles.

Edwardian - a term applied to houses built between 1900 and 1914. These red brick buildings have a prominent entrance and a porch with classical details.

Georgian Revival Buildings - built in the Georgian style after it had gone out of fashion. The style has been revived several times.

Georgian Buildings - the façades of Georgian houses are balanced with an equal number of windows on either side of the front door. The style was used for commercial as well as residential buildings.

Gothic Revival Style - was used particularly in the 19th century for houses, churches and schools. It is characterized by steeply pitched roofs, pointed window and door openings and decorative trim.

High Victorian Style - a conscious, picturesque combination of several styles. Buildings are irregular in outline and are designed to be appropriate to their setting.

Italianate Houses - have rounded window and door openings, hipped roofs, strongly accentuated corners and cornice brackets which are often paired.

Neo-Classical - distinguished by an elaborate doorway usually with an elliptical transom, and a side-gabled roof

Ontario Cottages - have a hipped roof and a central doorway flanked by one or two symmetrically placed windows that are identical in design.

Ontario Farmhouse - houses are common in rural Ontario but are also found in urban settings. They have one-and-a-half storeys with a central doorway and a central gable. They may be built of timber, brick or stone.

Prairie - this style has strong horizontal lines, broad, gently sloping or flat roofs, windows in groups and, often dominant chimneys.

Queen Anne Cottages - exhibit the characteristics of the Queen Anne style adapted to a single storey house with an attic.

Queen Anne Houses - have irregular outlines and silhouettes, they frequently have gables, two-storey bays, tall decorated chimneys and may use a variety of building materials.

Red Brick Commercial - was a common style between 1890 and 1920. These buildings usually have grey or greyish tan stone lintels and sills, with square headed windows and decorative brackets below the eaves.

Regency Style - closely related to Georgian but always with a hipped roof, long narrow windows (particularly on the first floor) and sometimes with a trellis-like support on the verandah.

Renaissance Revival Style - a revival style (1840-1890) characterized by a studied formalism found in the Renaissance style which was developed in early 15th century Italy during the rebirth of classical art and learning. It is characterized by the use of classical orders (eg. Doric), round arches, and symmetrical composition.

Romanesque Buildings - their chief characteristics are round-arched windows and doors. Walls can have smooth brick surfaces or irregular rusticated stone surfaces.

Second Empire - style recognized by its mansard roof, generally concave. Commonly used for institutional, commercial and major residential buildings which are, at times, highly decorated.

Shingle Style - frame buildings dominated by gabled rooflines and shingled walls.

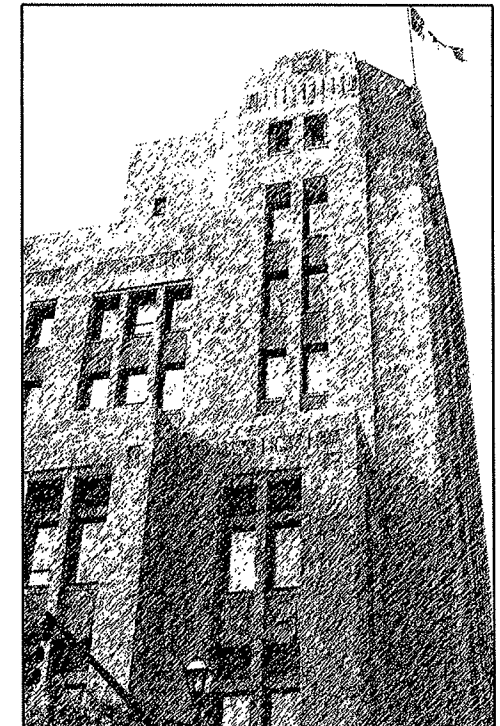

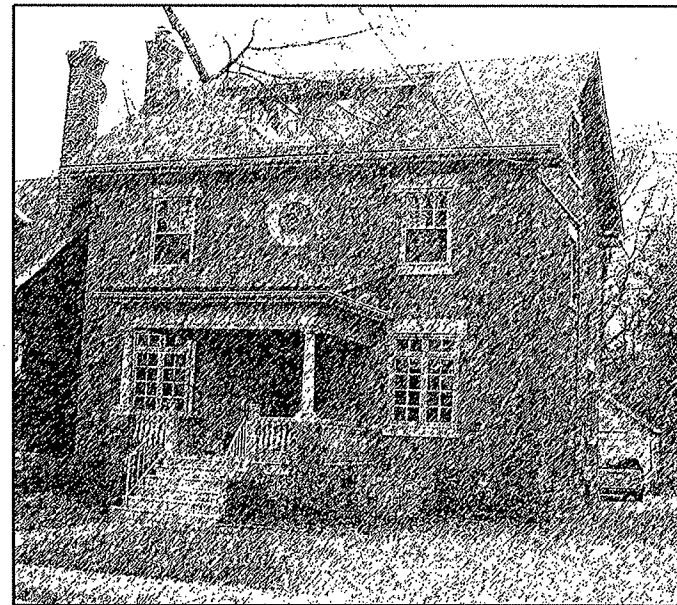

Side-Hall Plan (SHP) Cottage - has a front door on the side of the main façade.

Spanish Colonial - characteristics of this style include white stucco walls, red tile roofs, columns, wrought-iron railings and arches.

Terrace - nineteenth century term for row housing.

Tudor Revival Style - incorporates elements found in 16th century Tudor architecture such as steeply pitched roofs, casement windows, projecting second floors and half-timbering.

Vernacular Buildings - exhibit local design characteristics and use easily available building materials. They may be influenced by, but not defined by, a particular style.
